

REVENUE LEAK SNAPSHOT

For drywall companies

This is a quick look at the money most construction companies lose without ever seeing it - jobs that walk when a call goes unanswered, and quotes that quietly go cold. The numbers below are honest industry averages. It shows you what that costs, and what a simple system gets back for you.

1. What one job is worth to you

For your trade, one job is worth about $1,500 to $9,000. So every job you lose is not small change - it is real money.

To keep this honest, the math below values every job at just $1,500 - the low end. Your real jobs are often worth much more.

2. The Missed-Call Money Leak

Calls land while you are taping or sanding and cannot get to the phone. The customer wants a quote now, so a missed call usually means they move on to the next drywall.

Calls coming in each year, about	216
That go unanswered (20%)	43 calls
Callers who never call back (85%)	37 leads
That you'd actually win (35% close rate)	13 jobs
Each job worth (at the low end)	$1,500

Lost potential revenue $19,500 / yr

Not every call becomes a job - a call is only worth as much as the customer behind it. So this only counts the jobs you would have actually won.

3. The Dead-Quotes Leak

Drywall is price-sensitive and easy to shop around. A good share of the quotes you send go cold while the customer collects a few more numbers.

Quotes you send each year, about	144
That go cold and never close (40%)	58 quotes
A gentle nudge revives about (12%)	7 jobs
Each job worth (at the low end)	$1,500

Sitting in your files, winnable $10,500 / yr

These are people who already wanted the work and already got your price. Most just went quiet because nobody followed up.

4. What we get back for you

We catch every missed call the moment it happens with an instant text in your name, and we text your old quotes back into the pipeline. Here is a conservative year:

Missed calls we turn into booked jobs (30%)	$7,500
Dead quotes we revive (12%)	$10,500

Revenue we bring back to you $18,000 / yr

And we only ever bring back as much as your crew can handle. This fills your schedule, it does not flood it. More jobs caught, more old quotes closed, and a company that quietly makes more - without you lifting a finger.

How the two systems work

Plain and simple, here is exactly what we set up for you.

Missed-Call Text-Back

When someone calls and you cannot pick up - you are on a site, up a ladder, running a machine, or it is after hours - our system sees the missed call and sends them a text right away, in your company's name. Something like: "Hi, this is your company, sorry we missed you. What can we help you with?" They text back, and you have caught them before they call the next contractor. It runs 24 hours a day, 7 days a week.

Why it works: about 85% of people who reach a voicemail never call back, and fewer than 3% leave a message. They dial the next name on the list within minutes. A text lands different. Texts get opened 98% of the time, and most are read within three minutes. So instead of losing that job, you are the first to reply.

Contractors who add missed-call text-back turn roughly 30% or more of their missed calls into booked work. Jobs that would have gone to the competition.

Client Reactivation

You already have a stack of old quotes and past customers - people who asked for a price and went quiet, or hired you once and drifted off. They are not upset, nobody followed up. We take that list and send a friendly text in your name that brings them back into the pipeline. Their information never leaves your hands, and there is almost nothing for you to do.

Why it works: a text is personal and it gets read, where an email gets buried. So a simple, well-timed message pulls a real share of your dead quotes back into paying jobs.

A done-for-you reactivation campaign typically revives around 10 to 15% of your dead quotes. Work that was just sitting in your files, already earned once.

What this means for your company

Put together, these two systems plug the two biggest leaks you have. You stop losing new callers to the company down the road, and you quietly win back the quotes you already worked to earn. That means a fuller schedule, steadier income, and more jobs closed - all running in the background while you stay on the tools. We set it up, we manage it, and it is live within the week.

Figures are honest industry averages for the construction and home-services trades. Sources: Invoca - Cost of Missed Sales Calls; ServiceTitan - Contractor Missed-Call Data (2026); Signpost - Business Lost to Missed Calls; HBR - Speed-to-Lead Study; SMS open/response rates: Kenect, Notifyre (2025). Job values are conservative BC residential averages; your real numbers are typically higher.